PREFACE

FOR over sixty years CASSELL'S FRENCH-ENGLISH DICTIONARY has been in constant and ever-increasing use by both French and English students. During that long period there have been many revisions and new editions; but, with the ending of the Great War and the beginning of a new order of things, when we and our nearest Continental neighbours are brought into an even closer commercial, political, and social contact than has ever previously been the case, it appeared to the publishers to be advisable to bring out an entirely new work that should be reset and remodelled from start to finish.

The present work is founded on CASSELL'S NEW FRENCH AND ENGLISH DICTIONARY that was edited by M. James Boiulle and revised (in 1905 and 1910) by Mr. de V. Payen-Payne; and the aim of the Editor, Dr. Baker, has been to make the work thoroughly up-to-date in accordance with the methods of modern scholarship and lexicography, both from the point of view of vocabulary and pronunciation and that of general arrangement.

Vocabulary.

In a dictionary that cannot possibly include every word in two languages it is always a difficult matter to decide where to draw the line; working rules are therefore drawn up, and it will be of interest to readers, and of value to them in their use of the book, if we give a conspectus of those governing word-selection in the present case.

As, in the first place, room had to be found for a very large number of additions, it was necessary—in addition to the saving of space effected by the new method of grouping referred to below—to make certain omissions; it was therefore decided that words appearing in former editions of CASSELL'S FRENCH-ENGLISH DICTIONARIES that had become obsolete by the seventeenth century should be removed, together with a few illiterate spellings and unnecessary variants, and some highly specialized or technical words that could be of very little use to the general reader and student for whom this work is intended. These deletions, we should remark, affect the English-French section of the Dictionary to a greater extent than the French-English section, as ɹ placed below a consonant denotes that the consonant is syllabic, as in devilish (devlɪɹʃ), flattening (flætɹɪŋ), muddler (ʹmɑdɹləɪ).

TABLE OF IRREGULAR AND DEFECTIVE VERBS.

THE Imperfect of the Indicative, the Conditional, the Imperative, and the Imperfect of the Subjunctive, are wanting in this Table. These four tenses are formed as follows :

The imperfect of the indicative is regularly formed from the present participle by changing ant into aïs, as : parl-ant, je parl-aïs ; finiss-ant, je finiss-aïs, etc.

The conditional has always the same root as the future ; so that the first person of the future being known, it is easy to form the conditional, as : je parlerai, je parlerai-s ; je finirai, je finirai-s.

The imperative is always regularly formed from the present of the indicative, by suppressing the pronouns, as : je parle, imperative, parle ; except in the verbs avoir, être, and savoir. The third person singular and plural of the imperative are always the same as in the present of the subjunctive, and belong to that tense.

The imperfect of the subjunctive is always regularly formed from the preterit indicative by adding se, etc., to the second person singular, as : tu parlais, que je parlasse ; tu finis, que je finisse ; tu reçus, que je reçusse ; tu vendais, que je vendisse.
